Mr Cromwell proposed to testify and tell what he knew in the case. The council for the respondent, however admitted that he had paid a special liquoritar, so Mr Cromwell's testimony was not needed.

The stockholders of the Burton Stock

The stockholders of the Burton Stock Car Company held a special meeting at the office of Clarence Hale, Portland, Juesday morning, Charles E Barber, of Washing too, associate counsel with General Butler presiding One hundred and twenty eight stockholders, holding 39,172 shares were represented, and it was voted to increase the capital stock of the company to $1,000,000. This large increase of capital amounting to half a million will be expended on a plant which the company will build at kansas City, Mo, to be completed and in operation by Oct. I the works will have a capacity of turning out twenty five to thirty cars a day. The hearing in which this company is a pury, it having filed charges against every road running west from Chargo, to the effect that it had discriminated against as ears, is to be had before the interstate commerce commission some time during the week. Gen Benjamin F. Butler, of Cawell, and Charles E. Barba, of Washington, will appear in behalf of the company.

An Insulting Slander. Last Monday's Lewiston Journal contains an account of a meeting of Independent Reformers in that city on Sunday afternoon, in which the remarks of a Mr.

Seeing signs of intemperance, no was led to inquire into the moral and temperance status of that city. From several business men of whom he sought the information, scarcely, any could tell him the names of the churches, even in their immediate vicinity. One did remark that his wife had belonged to a church for many years, but he didn't know where it was. When, however, out of curiosicy, he toquired where he could obtain some liquor, a boy was promptly directed to show him where it could be had, a service which he respectfully declined. Such is the state of things in Bangor, where more interest is shown in rum than in churches by many of its citizens. SHE A History of Adventure

How different is the seems that I have now to tell from that which has just been told! Gone are the quiet college rooms gone the wild swayed English elms and cawling rooks and the familiar volumes on the stee ves, and in their place there rises a vision of the great calm ocean glearing in shaded silver lights beneath the beams of the full African moon. A genite breeze fills the hinge sail of our dhow and drags us through the water that ripples musically against our sides. Most of the men are sleeping forward, for it is near midnight but a stout swarthy Areb. Mahomed by name, stands at the tiller laxily steering by the stars. Three miles or more to our starboard is a low dim line. It is the eastern shore of Central M THE SQUALL.

miles or more to our starboard is a low dim line. It is the eastern shore of Central Africa. We are running to the southward before the northeast monsoon, between the mainkand and the reef that for hundreds of miles fringes that perilous coast. The night is quiet so quiet that a whisper can be heard fore and aft the dhow so quiet that a faint becoming sound rolls across the water to us from the distant land.

The Arab at the tiller bodds up his hand an I says one word 'Sunbai' (dion).

We all sit up and listen. Then it comes again a slow majestic sound that thrills us to the marrow.

Accordingly we hauled up the boat by the tow rope till it was right under the stern of the dlow and Job bundled into her about as gracefully as a suck of potatoes. Then we returned and sat down on the deck again, and smoked and tabled in little gusts and jerks. The night was so lovely and our brains were so full of suppressed excitement of one sort and another, that we did not feel inclined to turn in. For nearly an hour we sat thus and then I think, we both dozed off At least have a funit recollection of Leo skeepily explaining that the head was not a had place to hit a bulfalo if you could catch him exac ly between the horis or sent your bullet down his throat or some nonsense of the sort.

builet down his threat or some nonsense of the sort.

Then I remember no more till suddenly—a frightful rear of wind a shriek of terror from the awakening crew and a whip-like sting of water in our faces. Some of the men ran to let go the hall and and the yard would not come down. I sprung to my feet and hing on to a rope. The sky aft was dark as pitch but the moon shill shome brightly ahead of the and it up the blackness. Beneath its sheen a huge white topped breaker, twenty feet high or more was rushing on to us. It was on the break—the moon shome on its crest and threak—the moon shome on its crest and threak—the moon shome on its crest and threak—the moon shome on its rushed beneath the inky sky, driven by the awful a juil behind it. Suddenly, in the twinking of an eya, I saw the black shape of the whaleboat cast high into the air on the breaking wave. Then—a shock a water, a wild rush of boiling foam and I was clinging for my lifts to the shroud—ay swept straight out from it like a flag in a gale.

We were pooped.

The wave passed. It seemed to me that I was under water for minutes—really it was seconds. I looked for wand. The blast had torn out the great sail, and high in the sir it was fluttering away to keward. The blast had torn out the great sail, and high in the sir it was fluttering away to keward. If he a huge wounded bird. Then for a moment there was comparative calm, and in it I heard Job's voice yell ng wildly "Come here to the boat."

Bewildered and half drowned as I was, I had the sense to runh aft. I felt the dhow sliking under me—site was full of water Under her counter the whaleboat was togsing furiously, and I saw the Arab Mahomed, who had been steering leap into her I gave one desperate pull at the tow rope to bring the boat alongside. Wildly I sprung also, and Job caugh, me with one arm and I rolled into the bottor of the boat. Down went the show bodily, and as she did so Mahomed drew his curved knife and severed the fiber rope by which we were fast to her, and in another second we were driving before the storm over the place where the dow had been.

"Great God!" I sheitled det.

"Great God!" I shricked, "where is Leo! Leo! Leo! Leo! Leo! Leo! Leo! "He's gone, sir; God help him!" roared Joh into my ear, and such was the fury of the squall that his voice sounded like a whisper. I wrung my hands in agony. Leo was drowned, and I was left alive to mourn him. "Look or!" yelled Job, "here couses another."

I turned; a accord hage, wave yes over-taking us. I hoped is would drown; ma. With a curious factinglies I, washed its awful advant. The moon was marrie index now by the wreaths of the rushing storm, but a little light still caught the crest of the devouring breaker There was something dark in it—a piece of wreckage. It was on us now, and the boat was nearly full of water. But she was built in an tight compartments—heaven bless the man who in vented them—and littled up through it like a swan. Through the feam and turmoul I saw the black thing on the wave hurrying right at me. I put out my right arm to ward it from me and my hand closed on another an in the wrest of which my fingers gripped like a vise. I am a very strong man, and had something to hold to, but my arm was nearly torn from its socket by the strain and weight of the floating body. Had the rush lasted another two seconds I musteriher have let go or gone with it. But it passed, leaving us up to our lances in water.

us up to our knees in water

"Bail out! buil out! shouted Job suiting the action to the word But I could not bail just then for as the But I could not ball just them for as the moon went out and left us in total darkness one faint flying ray of light lit upon the face of the man I had gripped who was now half lying, half floating in the bottom of the baat. It was Leo Leo brought back by the wave—back dead or alive from the very jaws of death.

"Bail out! ball out! yelled Job or we shall founder.

I seized a large tin bowl with a handle to it, which was fixed under one of the seals and the three of us bailed away for dear life in the consistence of the cover and round us I senzed a large tiln bowl with a handle to it, which was fixed under one of the seats and the three of us bailed away for dear life. The furious tempest drove over and round us flugging the boat this way and that, the wind and the storm wreaths and the sheets of stanging spray blunded and bewildered us but through it all we worked like demons with the wild exhibitation of despair, for even despair can exhibitate. One minutes three minutes are minutes? The boat began to highly and no fresh way a swanged us. Five minutes are minutes are minuted three minutes are minutes. The boat began to highly above the naval shaking, of the hurricane came a fulled deeper toon. Breat beavens. It was the voice of break expected the hurricane came a fulled deeper toon. Breat beavens. The send of the sea was driving the bouts had round to starboard. If we struck the lime of brakers fifty yards to starboard of the gap we must sink. It was a great field of twitting sponting waves. Mabouned planted I is foot against the seat before him, and glaine got him. I saw his frown toes spread out like a hand with the tweight be put upon them as he took his strain of the tiller base came round a bit but not enough. I rearest to Job to back water while I dragged and labored at my card the as maswered now, and none too soon. Heavenst we were in them. And then followed a couple of minutes of lical threaking excitement such as I cannot help to describe. All I remember is a shirk in cas of foan out of which the billow rose here there and everywhere like aveniging ghoots from their ocean grave. Once we were turned right round but either by chance or through Mahomed's skillful steering, the beat's head came struck in a will yell of exhibition from the Arab, we shot out into the comparative smooth water of the month of sa b tween the teeth like lines of guishing waves.

But we were half full of water again, and not more than half a mile alread was the second lime of breakers. Again we set to and bailed furiously. Fortunately the storm had now quite gone by and the moon shone brightly eventing a rocky headland running half a mile or more early to the second lime of trial exappeared to be a continuation. Atain in the happeared to be a continuation. Atain in the five boiled around its foot. Probably the ride, that made it an out into the ocean only at clower level and formed the reef. This headland was term nated by a curious peak that seemed not to be more than a mile way from us. Just as we got the boat pretty clear for the second time. Lee to my immense relief, opened his eyes and temarked that the clothes had turn bled off the bed and that he supposed it was time to get up for chape! I told him to shut his ejes and keep quiet which he did without in the slightest degree realizing the josition. As for mystif his reference to the pel made more like twith a out if sick longing, on my conifortable rooms at Cambridge. Why had I been such a fool us to leave them? And then the whole seeme down to out final escape repeated itself only not quite so violet thy Mahomet is skillful thering and the air tight compartments saved out fires. In five minutes we were through and drifting—for we were too exhausted to do anything to help ourselves except keep her head straight—with the most starth is, rapidity round the head land with it late itself the most starth is, rapidity round the head land with it late, itself the most starth is, rapidity round the head land with it late, itself the most starth is, rapidity round the head land with it late, itself the most starth is properly out the head land was made the head we censed to make way and finally appeared to be in dead water. The storm had entirely passed, leaving a clean washed sky behind it the head land intercepted the heavy sea that had been cocasioned by the squall, and the inde which had been running so ficreely up the river (for we were in the mouth of a small river), was sluggish before it turned, so we floated questly, and before the moon went down managed to hall out the boat thoroughly and get her in hitle ship shape. Lee was elepting profoundly, and, on the whole, I thought us were not to wake him. It was true be was in his wet clothes, but the hight was now so warn that I thought (so did Job) that they were not likely to injure a man of his an usually vigorous constitution. Besides, we had no dry ones at hand. Presently the moon went down and left us floating on the waters, now only heaving like some troubled woman's breast, which gave is lessue to reflect upon all we had gone through and all that we had eccaped. Job stationed thimself at the bow, Mahomed kept his post at the tiller and I sat ou a seat in the middle of the boat close to where Leo was middle of the boat close to where Loo was lying.

The moon went slowly down in chastened loveliness, she departed like some sweet bride into her chamber, and long, well like shadows crept up the sky, through which the stars peeped skyly cut. Soon however, they too began to pale before a spleanfor in the east, and then the quivering footstepe of the dawn came rushing across the new born blue and shook them from their places. Quieter and more quiet grew the sea—quiet as the sort mists that brooded on her bosom and covered up her troubling as the illineive wreaths of sleep brood upon and cover up a pain rached mind, causing it to forget its sorrow. From the cast to the west sped the angels of the dawn, from sea to sea, from mountain top to mountain top, scattering light with both their hands. On thry sped out of the darkers, perfect, glorious, like spirits of the Just breaking from the touch, on, over, the quiet sea, over the low coast line, and the awamps beyond, and the mountains beyond them, over those who slept in peace and over those who welke in sorrow, over the swill and the swamps beyond, and the mountains beyond them, over the living and the dead; over the wide world and all that breathes or has breathed thereon.

It was a wanderfully beautiful sight, and yet sad, perhaps from the very excess of its good, over the living and the dead; over the wide world and all that breathes or has breathed thereon.

It was a wanderfully beautiful sight, and yet sad, perhaps from the very excess of its feature. There we have the symbol and the type of humanity, and all things with which humanity has to do. The symbol and the types, yet, and the farthly beginning and the end also. And on dinat morning this came home to mountain the ast night for eighteers of our fellow voyagers—had set forever for:

BLA. BURR, Proprietor. William to the life some sweet bride

The dhow had gone down with them they were tossing about now among the rocks and sea weed so much human drift on the great coem of death. And we four were saved! But one day a sunrise will come when we shall be among those who are lost, and then others will watch those glorious rays, and grow sad in the midst of beauty and dream of death in the full glow of arising life. For this is the lot of man.
